Philadelphia, PA – Kevin O'Brien Studio announces the debut of several new patterns, including Small Moroccan in their decorative velvet collection. Small Moroccan is a fresh spin on their new favorite pillow Moroccan, inspired by the traditionally intricate tile work found in Northern Africa.

Kevin O'Brien's journey from art student to manufacturer/designer has led him around the world in search of enduring inspirational design. A major influence that has resonated with the designer is the Islamic design elements and colors found in Moroccan architecture. With the recent release of Kevin O'Brien Studio's new velvet pillow called Moroccan, they found an impressive interest in the Moroccan trend that still seems to be residing in the home décor market this year. Seeing this, they developed a new coordinating pattern to compliment the medallion Moroccan pillow with the more tile-like Small Moroccan.

High Point Market just released an article on the new Moroccan pillow, featuring an interview with the designer himself stating that his initial inspiration for the design came from Yves St. Laurent's villa in Morocco. The repetitive tile work and stone work that we associate with Moroccan architecture "...provided strong design elements for O'Brien's own creations," states David Blair the author of the article. The Small Moroccan pillow is a fresh translation of this influence.

Expect to see the exotic Moroccan trend continue to grow as we approach the Spring/Summer 2013 season. Kevin O'Brien Studio's Moroccan and Small Moroccan hand painted decorative pillows will add the perfect amount of exotic flair to any interior this summer. Also debuting this market is the Links and Dots velvet decorative pillows.
